Though they're best suited to the outdoorsiest of outdoor pursuits, John Chapman's range of holdalls, shoulder bags and small leathers, have long adorned the limbs of both fisherman and businessmen alike.

One of the few remaining companies to produce their stock exclusively in the UK, and with around 80% of the manufacturing cost taken up with the price of the superior materials, you can be sure that you're buying a little piece of British heritage when you snap up a Chapman.

Far from confined to the tertiary colours favoured by country folk, the range – which includes washbags, laptop cases and car luggage – is available in a range of sunny hues such as mustard yellow and "French pink". Our favourite is the "Solway 16", currently to be found on some of the most creative shoulders in the capital.
